Total Emerson	+10 to +15	+10 to +15	+10

May 2008 Order Comments:

Order growth remained solid at 10 percent for the three months ending in May and continued to benefit from favorable currency exchange rates, which contributed approximately 5 percentage points to the growth.

Process Management continued to see positive end market demand driven by strength from the energy sectors. The order growth dropped from the April trailing three month average due to fluctuations in the timing of project bookings, but project databases and quote logs showed continued strength. Order growth continued to benefit from the weaker dollar.

Strength in the global power generating alternator business contributed to the overall strength in the Industrial Automation business segment. Orders continued to benefit from the weaker dollar.

Network Power order growth was led by strength in the China power systems business resulting from favorable Asian data-center computing and telecommunication end markets.

Climate Technologies order growth remained consistent with the prior month. Unseasonably cool weather across much of the U.S. and unfavorable U.S. residential market conditions created weakness in order growth. This weakness was partially offset by international growth including modest gains in the European commercial markets.

Appliance and Tools order trends were consistent with the prior month and continued to be adversely impacted by weakness in U.S. consumer spending and residential investment.
