April 2009 Order Comments:

Emerson's trailing three-month order rate for the period ending April 2009 remained in the range of negative 25 to 30 percent, with currency exchange rates negatively impacting orders by approximately 6 percentage points. Geographically, economic trends in Europe have taken another step-down. Unfortunately, we have seen a sequential deterioration in our underlying orders from the month of March to April and believe orders are still reflecting a volatile economic environment where customers continue to reduce inventory, backlogs and business spending levels. For the month of April, underlying orders were down approximately 25 percent, excluding a negative 8 percentage point currency impact, and were down 30 to 35 percent overall.

The trailing three-month order rate for Process Management was down 25 percent with currency exchange rates negatively impacting orders by approximately 10 percentage points, including a negative backlog revaluation impact due to the stronger U.S. dollar. Order rates remained mixed among end markets.

Broad weakness continued across the Industrial Automation businesses as global gross fixed investment has declined sharply and comparisons to the prior year period continue to be difficult. We have seen increasing order weakness in the power-generating alternator business.

Telecommunications and wind power investments continued to drive strength in the China power systems business which was more than offset by order declines across the balance of the Network Power businesses.

Broad weakness across residential, commercial and refrigeration end markets negatively impacted Climate Technologies order trends, with the outlook for the commercial end markets remaining the weakest.

Orders for Appliance and Tools were negatively impacted by continued weakness in consumer spending and residential and non-residential investment.
